Yes definitely all great writers were greatly challenged, first by themselves then by external forces until it became a way of breathing existing in its own right. A day not complete without some words to spill out onto the page. The cool, refreshing breathe. When all else fails - write. How to record writing without writing or what role does handwriting have on cognition and writing. Or stress levels. Rhythmic ability? Hand strength? I do miss doodling and Zen Doodling and maybe even practicing slow writing or flow writing.

but where you get points for legibility - Font design. Line smoothness. Consistency. Ohay with all those qualifiers I wonder what a grade might look like? And how one might draw differently. Very excited to have gotten a few things for myself. Weekly planner, pants and underwear. I am well taken care of and I take care of myself. I do like keeping my prewriting journals for free writing and want to have something dedicated to my play and planning. One note is good for work but what I care even more about, is my whole life where work is a component.

I have to wonder is there something statistically with women and snelling and game shows. The eds always seem to include that so that's a weird target market. How do you even find people who belong to a target market.

I do have that same voice going on in my head like the narrarnarrator from I in the City. Funny that I would be Carrie but it made those episodes really memorable and also comforting to have that familiar voice. The comfort of familiarity what a wonderful just as there is in my writing and the excitement of brushing what I start.
